

ABSTRACT

5      An adjustable dilator assembly suitable for the dilation of a mammary duct includes an elongated hollow housing that terminates at one end into a cannula and defines a through passageway. A pliant probe, extendable through the catheter, is mounted within the hollow housing for adjustable axial movement. The probe is preferably mounted to a probe support or carrier that is threadably engaged with the hollow housing.